

APOLOGY

I wish to apologize, both to the authors featured in the following pages and to our readers, for the fact that the first issue of Parliamentary Debate, has had to be published without my editing of the individual texts. Therefore, the cosmetic appearance of the issue (uniformity of type, page numbers, etc) is not what it could have been. Due to my reassignment cross country, my difficulty in getting my family settled, and the subsequent discovery that no one at my duty location in Alabama uses Microsoft Word, I had a choice to make—either publish the journal without editing, or delay the first issue even longer. Because it seemed more important to get information about parliamentary debate "on the street," we chose to publish. I hope you'll agree the decision was the right one.
